TAKING CARE OF YOU

All caregivers need help and support. It may be hard for you to focus on yourself, but it’s important for your well-being. Here are some tips to help you through this challenging time.

Ask for help
You may feel that you need to do it all, but you can’t do everything. Take a look at what you’d be willing to have someone else handle. Moving even a few responsibilities to someone else can make a big difference. Ask someone to:

› Take on some chores (cooking, cleaning, shopping, laundry, yard work)
› Pick up kids from school or activities
› Drive to appointments, or pick up medicines
› Keep family and friends updated

Find a way to relax
Take 15-30 minutes each day to do something that you enjoy, such as a nap, reading, a hobby or exercise.

Don’t cut yourself off
You may not have time for everything you used to do, but be sure to keep up with some of your regular activities and stay connected with friends. It may help to lower your stress.

Learn more about cancer
The unknown can be scary. The more you know about your loved one’s condition, the more confident you’ll be in your caregiving role.

Connect with your loved one in need
You’re going through a very difficult time together. Although it can feel overwhelming, it can be a time of bonding. Appreciate the special moments with one another.

Caring for someone with cancer can sometimes feel overwhelming. It’s not easy handling medicines, doctor appointments, meals and everyday tasks. There’s also the emotional support you provide, helping your loved one deal with a range of feelings and difficult decisions.

With such a big focus on your loved one, you may be putting aside your own needs. This can take a toll on your emotional and physical health. Remember, you need to be strong, too.
Find the positive and be thankful
It may not always be easy, but the positive moments and feelings of gratitude for the simplest things can help you get through the day. Know that it’s okay to feel joy and to laugh. Laughter is a great way to relieve stress.

Pay attention to yourself
It’s important to pay attention to what you’re experiencing and feeling. You may have a range of emotions such as anger, anxiety, depression, fear, loneliness or guilt. Find a way to process your feelings whether it’s talking with a friend, spending time on your own or a balance of both. Other things that may help:

› Join a support group
  Talking with others who are dealing with similar issues can be helpful. You’ll see that you’re not alone and can hear how other people cope. You can share your experiences or just listen to others. Groups can meet in person, by phone or even online.

› Use a journal
  Writing can help you process your thoughts and feelings. You may be surprised at how it may help calm your mind.

› Talk with a professional
  Sometimes you may want to open up to someone outside your friends and family. It may be helpful to talk with a counselor, social worker or someone in your faith community. You may feel more free to discuss things that you don’t want to share with friends or family.

This is general health information and not medical advice or services. Always consult with your doctor for appropriate examinations, treatment, testing and health care recommendations.